Jenny: “Bunking off”... “skipping school”... “skiving”...They all mean one thing: staying away from school without permission. According to the British Government, 43,000 teenagers bunk off school every day which is a big problem for schools. What can be done to stop it? We've got Evan Jones with us in the studio today. Evan is a journalist who writes about education. Let's get right to it, Evan. First of all, what's the legal situation? Do teenagers have to go to school?

Evan: Yes, in the UK up to the age of 16, they must be in school during school hours.

Jenny: But quite a lot of British teenagers are bunking off on a regular basis. What are schools doing to stop it?

Evan: Well, one school is trying a PIN number system. At the International School in Birmingham, pupils come in through the main gates as normal. Then, the teachers lock the main gates. If a pupil arrives late, they have to enter their own PIN number to enter the school through a side gate.

Jenny: So the school knows who is there and who is arriving late.

Evan: That's right, and the school says it works. There's much less bunking off.

Jenny: Why can't a pupil put another pupil's PIN number in?

Evan: Yes, that does happen. So they're planning to replace PIN numbers with fingerprints.

Jenny: That's very high tech! When I was at school, the teacher had a list of names and a pen! Well, that's all we have time for today. Join us again tomorrow when we'll discuss the upcoming royal wedding!

TEACHER

You're an active person who enjoys activities like swimming and ice skating. The only reason you'd go to a shopping centre is to see some film at the cinema there – but it would have to be a really good film! Other than that, you think shopping centres are noisy and a waste of time.

You're just meeting up with a friend. Find out what he/she wants.

STUDENT

You've decided to invite a friend to a big shopping centre in your town on Saturday afternoon. You like it there because there's so much to do! Of course, you love the fast food restaurants there too. Invite your friend and tell him/her what you would like to do together at the shopping centre and why. Don't forget to suggest good places to eat!

You start: Hi!
