LISTENING COMPREHENSION

(please read twice)

Jenny: Today we've got celebrity chef Sammy Biddle in the studio to show us how to make some typical English food.

Sammy: Hi. Yeah, today I'm going to make scones.

Jenny: Yummy! I love scones. How do you make them?

Sammy: First of all, put flour and salt in a mixing bowl. Add butter and cut it into pieces. Oops, I forgot – before you start you must wash your hands. That's really important because next you're going to use your hands. Ready? Get the butter and the flour and rub them together with your fingers.

Jenny: Yuck! That looks sticky!

Sammy: Then add the sugar and the sultanas. Now stir with a spoon.

Jenny: Can I have a go?

Sammy: Sure. Now add the milk. And mix everything together.

Jenny: Mmm...

Sammy: Oh, you! No taste testing! Now roll the mixture out with a rolling pin. Then cut out shapes with biscuit cutters.

Jenny: Hey, this is fun!

Sammy: Then put the scones in the oven for fifteen minutes. Now, while they're baking, we can whisk some cream. Would you like a go, Jenny?

Jenny: No thanks! That looks like hard work! [...ding!] They're ready! They're ready!

Sammy: Let's open the oven door.

Jenny: They smell delicious!

Sammy: Ouch! They're hot! Now cut them in half. Put some jam and some cream on top. There ... try one, Jenny ...

Jenny: Mmmm! Delicious! Thanks, Sammy.

ROLEPLAY

TEACHER

Your favourite niece/nephew would like you to be the topic of an English project for school. Answer their questions about your life, as far back as you can remember.

You are in your 60s, the oldest of 6 children. Your youngest brother, this niece's/nephew's father, is the youngest in the family and 20 years younger than you. You remember a lot about your childhood and your siblings. But you don't like talking a lot so you only speak when asked a question. But you will be sure they get your story right! You wouldn't want falsehoods in that project!
