The beauty of the Greek islands has impressed and inspired many visitors over the years. In fact, some islands, like Hydra, Mykonos and Rhodes, have become world renowned as a result of their famous fans or use as backdrops for major Hollywood movies.

No less visually stunning, but less well-known, Amorgos, a hilly island in the middle of the Aegean, has become an excellent example of the kind of tourism the GNTO describes as agrotourism.

Only recently discovered by foreign visitors, the 140 square kilometre island has just a few small hotels, but with its many pensions and rooms for rent can accommodate up to 1,500 tourists. It also has two campsites, which are very popular with low-budget visitors.

Paul Delahunt-Rimmer, a 50-year-old retired RAF squadron leader who discovered Amorgos after reading an article on the Aegean islands, was overwhelmed by the island when he and his wife visited in 1995.

They particularly enjoyed the peace, quiet and exceptional friendliness of the people, but most of all the solitude of the mountains and the many quiet beaches. In fact, they liked it so much they decided to settle in Amorgos and promote agrotourism by organizing island walks for groups of tourists wanting to enjoy the simple but beautiful life the island offers.

The tourists Paul guides in Amorgos are interested in walking, photography, visiting archaeological sites – some of which date back to the fifth century BC – bird-watching and enjoying the beautiful wild flowers of the island.

Naturally, most visitors also enjoy swimming and sunbathing on the white sandy beaches of the island, which are lined with tamarisk trees.

Nikos Vassalos and his wife also run a typical agrotourism business. Their hotel in the village of Langada has 20 rooms. They also have a restaurant, a bakery and a farm. They produce vegetables, poultry, pork and other items, because they use only their own products in their restaurant.

Amorgos does not offer expensive attractions; it offers quality tourism. Very few visitors to Amorgos get to see the most remarkable sights, as they can only be visited by donkey ride or on foot. It is quite extraordinary terrain, and a local guide is essential.

Student

You are a Slovak Erasmus student at a university in England. Your tutor has asked you to come up with three Slovak traditions you think your non-Slovak classmates should be familiar with.

Focus on:

- Each of the 3 traditions you have chosen and why you chose each
- How your classmates could learn about them – what activities could be used to introduce your classmates to those particular traditions?

Teacher

You are a teacher at a university in England. You have asked an Erasmus student from Slovakia to come up with three Slovak traditions you think your non-Slovak students should be familiar with.

You have told them to focus on:

- Each of the 3 traditions chosen and why they were chosen
- How students could learn about them – what activities could be used to introduce them to those particular traditions?

You, however, already know about quite a few Slovak traditions and really want the Erasmus student to be very specific in what they discuss. Direct the conversation in such a way that the student changes their mind.
