(Please read twice.)

My little sister had days when she stopped talking to us without any reason at all. We got used to it but my father couldn't. Once when she didn't answer his question he got furious. He took her by her arm and ordered her to answer all his questions at once.

As he had never acted like that before, she got frightened and answered all his questions at once.

“What do you like?” he asked.

“I like the book you gave me yesterday,” whispered my sister.

“And,” father insisted.

“I like the trousers you are wearing, I like the tie you have on, I like the money you give me every week.”

“What don't you like?” father interrupted her.

“I don't like you when you treat me like this.” My sister continued, “I don't like the face you are making at me and I don't like the way you are talking to me.”

“Who do you know?” father went on with another question.

“I know a boy who lives next door. I know Mrs Burt, who rang up today. I know our flat that we live in. I know...”

We didn't know father's intentions at first. He stopped talking to her as suddenly as he had started. She stopped talking as well and we waited for her to burst into tears but she didn't. Next time our sister had another fussy day our father only mentioned, “Just answer my question,” and she forgot all about her fuss and acted in the way we all loved.

ROLE PLAY

TEACHER – parent

Your child has asked to talk to you. He/she wants a dog! Listen to his/her reasons, but keep in mind you also have serious reasons not to have a dog: No garden, it is expensive (food, a vet, etc.), noisy, dirty, might bite, etc.

ROLEPLAY

STUDENT – son or daughter

You would like to have a pet – a dog. Many of your friends have one. Think of five serious reasons that could persuade your parent to get you a dog.

You start: Mum/dad, I want to talk to you. I feel so lonely these days...
