Teacher – Friend

You can't live without (any) IT gadgets. Your mobile and computer are all you need. Your family's complaints drive you mad, but they say they miss you in their lives. You are not interested in any family or school activities. .... You are completely uninterested!

Student – Friend

You are trying something unthinkable, to get your friend's attention and persuade him/her to go somewhere, do something crazy or beautiful, whatever, just make him/her disconnect from those IT gadgets on weekdays or at the weekend. It is not going to be easy but you know that his/her situation is getting very serious!

Speaker 1:

There was a sign on the door saying the lock didn't work properly but I didn't see it until after I'd pulled the door closed. I wasn't really worried at first because I was pretty sure there were still some other people in the building, but after I'd spent about half an hour making as much noise as I could – shouting at the top of my lungs, banging on the door with my shoe, which didn't work! – I realised everyone else must have gone home. Then I had a few moments of panic before I remembered I had my mobile. I rang my friend and...well, eventually I got out.

Speaker 2:

The night before I'd packed a rucksack with water, chocolate, a plastic jacket and so on. Someone had given Alan a whistle because that could be used to attract attention if we were in trouble – and luckily he had that with him as well. When he fell and hurt his ankle, I tried to use the mobile but it wouldn't work in the mountains. It was cold and damp but we kept warm and dry with the jackets. Strangely enough, I didn't give up hope – I wasn't even afraid of animals. I knew someone would find us. We waited and I kept blowing on the whistle and eventually the rescue people came.

Speaker 3:

Susan warned us not to go into the water because there was a very strong current, but it was the first day of our holiday and I couldn't resist. Then it all happened so quickly. Eddie and I were swept quite a long way out to sea before we noticed. I knew he wasn't a strong swimmer and I could see he was beginning to panic – so I just said to him very firmly, "Trust me." I used the surf rescue technique I'd been taught and managed to get us both back to the beach. It was only then I realised how brave I'd been. It was just an automatic reaction.

Speaker 4:

No one remembered the last place we'd seen him but we all set out to look for him around the area of the picnic ground. It wasn't a very well-organized search and it was getting dark. We searched all night and by morning things were looking bad. And then we heard a noise – a crying sound. I thought it was an animal. Then I realised it was a child calling. We ran forwards and then saw him. He'd fallen into a hole and broken his leg – but he seemed to be all right apart from the pain.

Speaker 5:

Hardly anyone used the pool in the winter and that day was so cold even the caretaker had gone inside to have a cup of tea or something. The trouble was he'd taken away the ladders that you use to get out of the pool. I didn't notice until I decided to get out. I tried to lift myself out but my arms weren't strong enough. After trying for ten minutes without success, I was getting very cold. I tried to keep swimming but I couldn't breathe properly and it was difficult to move my arms and legs. I had swallowed quite a lot of water, and then I actually thought I was going to die. Then the caretaker came back and pulled me out – just in time!
