Andy Murray:

From moody teenager to tennis superstar.

Andy Murray is Britain's top tennis player and one of the four best players in the world. British sports fans love heroes. But not everybody loves Andy. Why not? There were two things. One was his attitude on the court. He was moody and he never smiled. He argued with the umpire and he shouted at himself. The other was his attitude to the media. He didn't enjoy the TV or newspaper interviews after his matches. He always looked miserable. "When I was 18, I found the press stuff very difficult," says Andy. "I didn't deal with it particularly well."

Andy got a new coach, he started training in the gym, he got a dog, he relaxed ... and he started to win. In the 2008 season, he beat the best top players – Federer, Nadal and Djokovic. Andy says the dog was the key. "Since I got a dog, my results have been a lot better."

In 2009, Andy is like a different player. He's enjoying all the attention, and he isn't finding it too stressful. "He waves. He smiles, he doesn't pick fights or hide behind his cap," says the BBC tennis commentator. That's because he is concentrating.

But if you saw him at home, you wouldn't recognise him! He's relaxed, he jokes and he loves playing tricks on people. "At Christmas, he's the life and soul of the party," says Andy's grandmother. If Andy wins Wimbledon, the British public will love him forever.
