READING COMPREHENSION (1)*The Royal Mint

The Royal Mint is the world's leading export mint, making coins and medals for an average of 60 countries every year. The Royal Mint can produce 90 million coins and blanks a week – almost five billion coins a year. Opened by the Queen in 1968 in readiness for the introduction of decimal coinage, the Royal Mint's headquarters in South Wales employs more than 900 people. The Royal Mint is a government-owned company. This is the fourth time the Mint has produced a commemorative coin to mark the UK's relationship with the European Union. The first was made when the UK joined the European Economic Community in 1973, a second for the single market in 1992 and a third marked the UK's 25th anniversary of joining the EU in 1998. Strike your own commemorative Brexit coin and take it home with you. This is available for a small fee and it is the only place in Britain where you can do this. Visitors will have the opportunity to strike commemorative coins until February 12.

A look at the new Brexit 50p coin

Commonly known as 'Brexit', the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the European Union will officially take place on 31 January 2020. The withdrawal serves as a culmination of the period in British history kicked off by the referendum on 23 June 2016 which was followed by the country triggering Article 50 of the Lisbon Treaty on 29 March 2017. Britain will leave the EU at 11pm on Friday – 1,317 days after the vote for Brexit. We will then have 11 months to get a UK-EU trade deal, or risk crashing out without one on 1 January 2021.

And to celebrate, three million commemorative 50p coins will enter circulation across the country. Bearing the messages 'peace, prosperity and friendship with all nations' and '31 January 2020', they will finally see the light of day after a million with the old date had to be melted down. It will mark the third time lucky for the release of the coin, which had initially been due to enter circulation on 31 March 2019, when around 1,000 prototypes were made. A second batch of coins was then manufactured when it was delayed until 31 October 2019, but the UK's departure date was pushed back once again.

More than 13,000 people have already registered their interest in commemorative gold or silver versions of the coin which are available to buy from the Royal Mint. The coins, which were produced in a limited edition, were sold out.

You can pick up a standard Brexit 50p at a post office for, well, 50p – but that's not good enough for Brexit fans, who were up at the crack of dawn to queue for a special edition version. Of course, you don't have to pay more than 50p for a coin as millions have been struck to appear in loose change. Around three million Brexit 50p coins were entering banks, post offices and shops from Friday, with another seven million of the coins coming later this year.

Remainers vow to boycott it

But it's fair to say these little tokens have not been met with joy by everyone in the United Kingdom. Alastair Campbell said, 'I for one shall be asking shopkeepers for "two 20p pieces and a 10."' He said that while the coin claims 'Brexit is about "peace, prosperity and friendship with all nations", it puts all three at risk.'

Andrew Adonis joined the boycott, saying, 'I am never using or accepting this coin.' Several compared it to cheesy 'live, laugh, love' signs sold to brighten up people's homes. Comedian David Baddiel added, 'Can you actually pay for things with the Brexit 50p coin? Or will it be worthless, except for its symbolic value, like the thing it's commemorating?'
