You are a member of the Historic Society. You have heard that a huge new supermarket with a car park for 500 cars is planned to be built in your village. You are sure that modern architecture is not suitable in your village. You are afraid the village square will be spoilt and the view of the river will be ruined by a car park. You think that the village will have traffic problems from delivery lorries and shoppers' cars. You have decided to address the local mayor to give your views at an arranged meeting. You want to persuade the mayor but are ready to ask other local people to give supportive views at a public meeting to be held on Friday.

English teacher – a local mayor

One of your villagers, who is a member of the Historic Society, has arranged a meeting with you in which he/she would like to express his/her opinions about the building of an ultra-modern supermarket with a car park for 500 cars. It is planned to be built between the village square and the local river on land that was bought by a wealthy investor. You see a lot of advantages for local people:

- employment opportunities,
- making the village more attractive for people from neighbouring villages,
- modernising the village centre,
- making the village attractive for other investors.

You need to persuade this member of the Historic Society in order to stop other local people from giving their views at a public meeting to be held on Friday.

Look at the pictures related to street entertainment and discuss the following bullet points:

- a description of the people, the setting, and the occasion;
- which of these events is likely to be seen in your city/country and whether they are popular;
- which one you prefer and why;
- whether you would try any of them, why yes/why not.

You will hear five illustrative texts to the topics. For statements 01-08, match texts A-E which you will hear. Three statements do not directly match the texts; write X instead of a number for them. You will score five points.

Angella Rippon, 72, lives in London. She presents BBC One's consumer show, Rip Off Britain, with Gloria Hunniford. They talk about their lives and what they have in common.

Text A

In fact, you wouldn't believe how many Zara jackets we've got that are the same or similar. We're always saying, 'Oh, I've got that in a different colour!' It's funny because I've actually had people mistake me for Gio in the street; they'll shout, 'Here, Gloria!' and I have to say, 'No, she's the Irish one – I'm the other one!'

Text B

There have been moments in the last couple of years when Gio's health hasn't been good. She'll hate me for saying this, but I can't help feeling a bit protective towards her when we're out and about together now. Perhaps part of liking her so much means I just want to look out for her.

Text C

Gio and I don't always agree on everything, but we can laugh about it together. We have this game we play in-between takes on Rip Off Britain; she'll say 'You can be the Minister of State for Health today and I'll be the Prime Minister' or 'I'll be the Chancellor of the Exchequer and you can be the Foreign Secretary', and we talk politics together. It's hilarious! Especially when the NHS comes up (that's one thing we don't agree on).

Text D

We're both in our seventies now and we don't have any intention of slowing down because, actually, we enjoy working – and while people go on asking us to do what we do, why wouldn't we? It's wonderful when you find someone who shares that feeling.

Text E

When we're not working, you'll often find us having lunch at The Ivy Chelsea Garden – we always sit at this little table by the fire in the conservatory – and we'll natter for hours. I love those off-camera moments where we can just be ourselves together.
